Anna's Journey: A British Lady in West Africa and Colonial Australia

Year of Hope: 1857 in the Colac District

Sailing up the River Gambia in 1846; spending time as the only white woman living in Monrovia the capital of Liberia in 1849 - these were two experiences which awaited the child born in a rectory in County Cork, Ireland in 1820. Anna Godwin had an adventurous spirit, a passion for human rights, and an extended family which all contributed to her unusual life.

The story of her life, which provides a window on widely differing colonial societies, ends with her death in East St Kilda in 1891. Although Anna and husband Edward did not achieve prominence, several of her descendants inherited her independence and initiative and did make notable contributions to Australian society.

This book places the particular local history of Colac firmly within the context of Victorian history during the colony's first full year of responsible government. Year of Hope takes us through the twelve months with a factual and fascinating account of power, religion, class and race in both this local area and the fledgling Victorian colony.

Year of Hope: 1857 in the Colac District won a strong commendation from the Judges in the 2007 Victorian Community History Awards. The Judges said the book sprang from the splendid idea to isolate one year in the life of the town. Carefully chosen themes create a feeling of gradually moving through a year, with its seasonal changes and new developments.
